

'The Good Wife': Cary and Kalinda are on the same page

'The Good Wife' star Matt Czuchry hints at more Cary/Kalinda action

With Lockhart Gardner finally out of its financial hole, The Good Wife's end-of-season run shifts its focus to how the firm's lawyers are dealing with all the change. For one character, that involves a lot of self-exploration.

According to Cary portrayer Matt Czuchry, now that Alicia (Julianna Margulies) has been offered partnership while Cary's deal was put on hold is going to raise a lot of questions for the character.

"He's moving forward throughout the season in helping the firm win cases and showing his worth," Czuchry explains to TV Guide Canada. "And it looks like that's been rewarded in partnership, and then of course that partnership is ripped away ... Where does Cary see himself now within the firm; does he want to continue exploring that option of leaving?"

This isn't the first time Alicia has been offered a position over Cary. Early in the show Diane (Christine Baranski) and Will (Josh Charles) fired the younger lawyer when faced with the option of keeping only one, a move that sent Cary into a weird career trajectory over the course of four seasons.

"Alicia, being a partner, has more power and control and status, so how does that affect their working relationship?" Czuchry muses. "It's going to create a kind of haves and have nots, so to speak between Alicia and the other partners versus the other people who are on the outs."

who are on the same page.

According to Czuchry, his career trajectory, along with the moment when he finally stood up to his father (guest star John Shea) earlier this season, were two pivotal moments in bringing the character to his mindset after the "Red Team, Blue Team" episode that aired two weeks ago.

"That's how we've seen his growth, those pinnacle moments," Czuchry says. "I think those are kind of the big beats. He's certainly in place right now where he's at a defining moment."

With Cary's father set to return in the March 17 episode, "Invitation To An Inquest," and the always-lingering romantic tension between him and Kalinda (Archie Panjabi), things are going to get pretty interesting for the character, to say the least.

"Kalinda's been through a lot of personal issues with her husband coming back, and Cary's been through a lot of personal issues with his father," Czuchry hints. "They feel undervalued at the firm, so personally and professionally they're on the same page and I don't think that has ever happened before. So with that, anything is possible, in terms of being on the same page. In terms of anything romantic happening in the future, there's an interesting scene coming up in an episode towards the end of the season that's of a personal nature. There's also some scenes tied to Cary and Kalinda of a professional nature ... I'll just say that."

The Good Wife airs Sundays at 9 p.m. ET on CBS and at 10 p.m. ET on Global.
